Graduate Student Associates Program

Harvard University's Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies invites applications to its Graduate Student Associates Program. Graduate Student Associates are an integral part of the multi-disciplinary community of scholars at the Davis Center. Benefits include:

- Enhanced opportunities for contact with Davis Center associates, visiting scholars, and guest lecturers;
- Invitations to dinners with visiting scholars and other special events;
- Access to the Davis Center's Moscow office for research travel arrangements;
- Personal account for sending and receiving faxes;
- Personal account for photocopying;
- Mail service;
- Eligibility for office space (priority given to those who have already passed general exams);

Applicants for Graduate Student Associate status must be enrolled Harvard Ph.D. students working in the humanities or social sciences in the field of Russian, East European, or Central Asian studies. Applications for Graduate Student Associate status are accepted on a rolling basis throughout the year, with renewals made by e-mail application. Office space allocations are made each spring for the coming academic year, and Graduate Student Associates must re-apply for space each year. The deadline to apply for office space falls in March and is posted on our web site at:
